W. LAWRENCE CANNON
Principal

"By precept and example he taught us courtesy, tolerance, and loyalty, as well as efficiency in meeting our responsibilities."

When Mr. W. Lawrence Cannon left Southwest as a teacher of science and mathematics in 1945 to become vice-principal of Paseo High School, Southwest students voiced their gratitude to him in the above-quoted tribute. By changing their statement to the present tense, we express our own appreciation of Mr. Cannon as our new principal and add to this expression a hearty "Welcome Home!"

GORDON WESNER
Vice-Principal

MARJORIE S. PATTERSON
Educational Counselor

Miss Katharine Morgan has made her place at Southwest as an inspiring teacher of Latin and Spanish, and sponsor of Sappho. To her, teaching has been both an interest and an avocation. With a strong devotion to her profession and to Southwest, she has endeared herself with countless students, patrons, and associates who have admired her for her scholarship and have loved her for her vivacious personality, her friendly understanding, and her keen wit. Miss Morgan will leave Southwest this spring, but the influence of her enthusiasm and of her leadership will remain.

Until his retirement this year, Mr. Floid L. Harnden, familiarly called "Mike" by his friends, served Southwest as an expert teacher of drafting and mathematics. Many successful architects and engineers throughout the country can attest to the excellence of the training received from him. He taught them not merely fundamentals but also the value of meticulous work and the satisfaction of successful accomplishment. He served Southwest in other ways also; he founded the Engineers' Club and for twenty-five years was photographer for the Sachem. Southwest deeply appreciates his services to her.

Mrs. Alicia Seifrit's decision to leave the teaching profession last spring to make her home in Tonganoxie, Kansas, came as a surprise to her many friends at Southwest, who, however, wish her much joy in her choice. As a teacher of English, she gave freely of herself to her students and guided them to higher standards and a deeper appreciation of English both in her classroom and in Veda Literary Society, in which she served as co-sponsor. A warm attachment prevailed between her and her students, for gladly she provided learning and gladly she served youth.

Good is this tongue for all the needs of life.

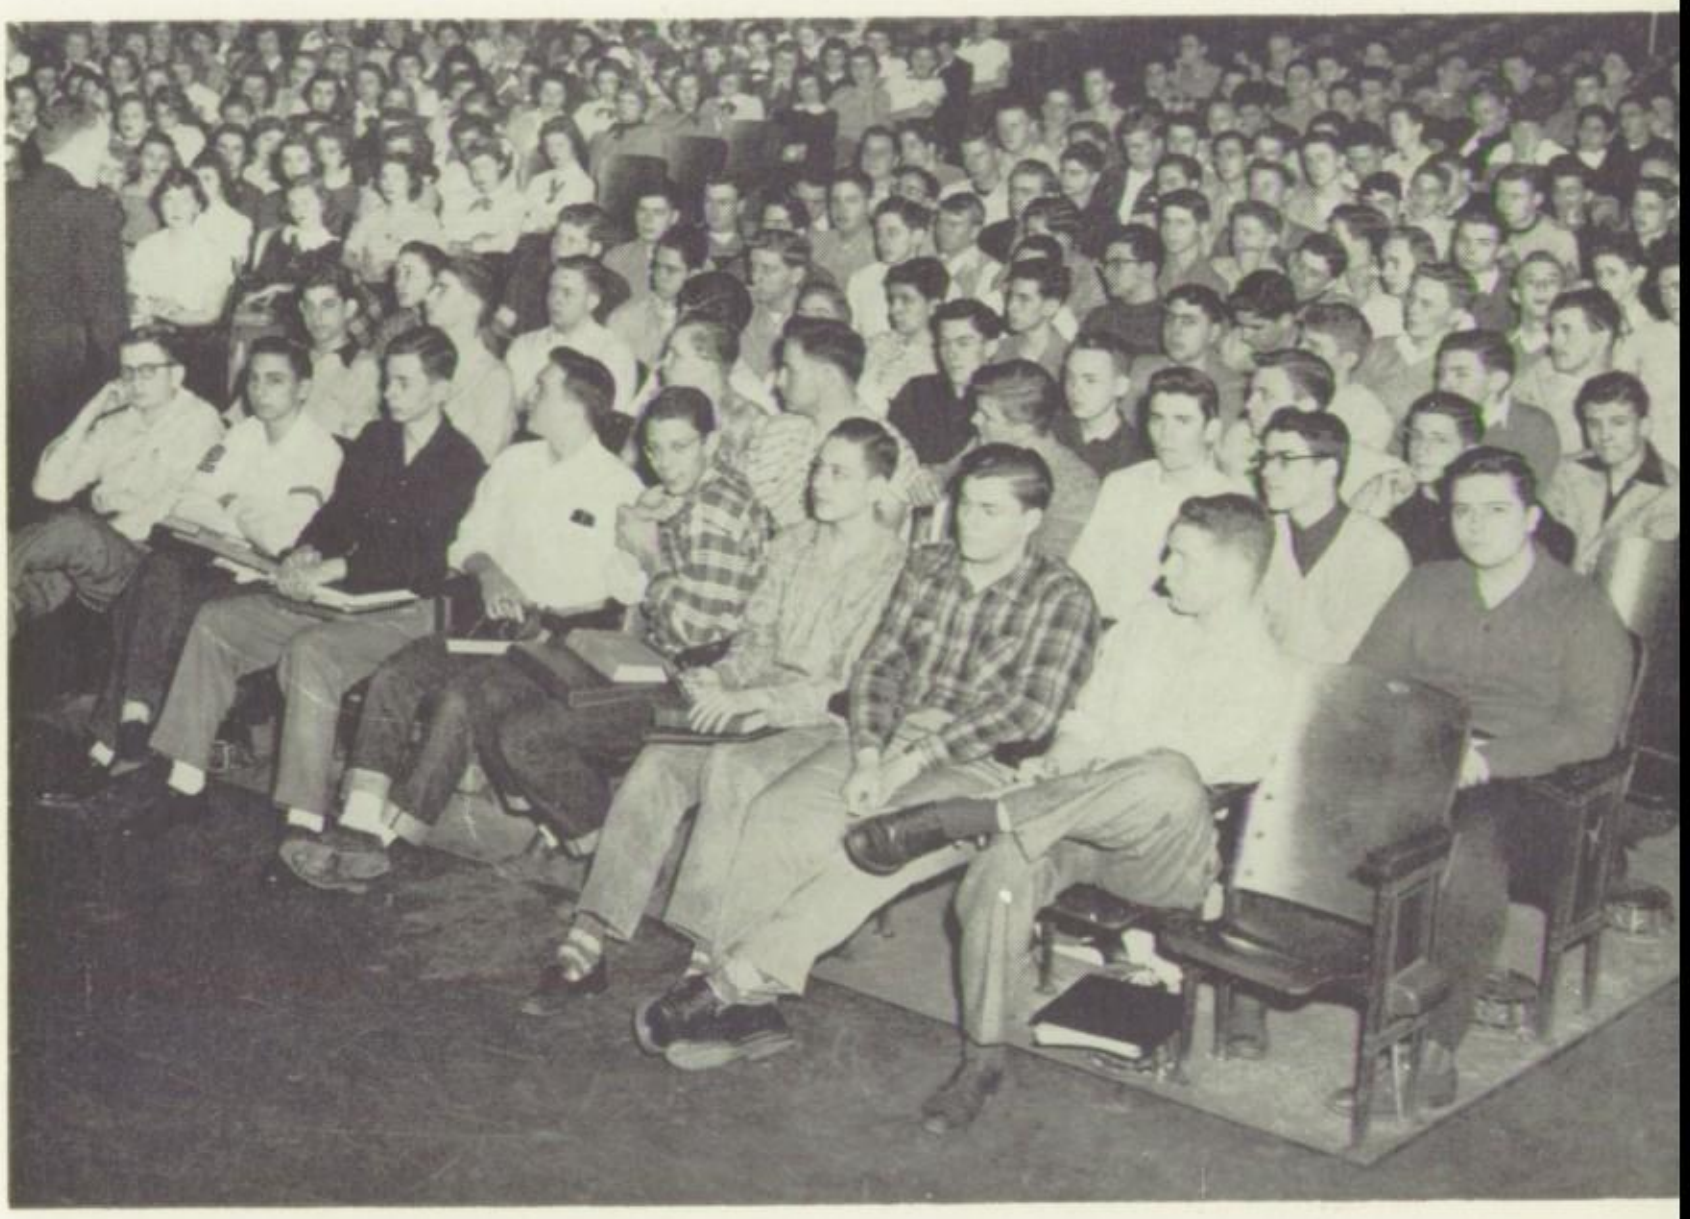
Sonnet for Seniors

This happy year, the last we spend, is filled with golden days
So rich with laughter and with fun that we would hold them fast;
But, slipping through our fingers, they are lost. We then must gaze
Backward in memory, as Time, with wings, goes flying past
In dizzy whirl our freshman dreams have suddenly grown real—
Exams and contests, plays and proms, each student enterprise
Is launched upon so hurriedly that we cannot conceal
Our wonder that there has not been much time for growing wise.
Comes then, at last, the hard-won goal that we held in sight!
With solemn march along an unseen aisle, reluctant feet,
That would turn back the swiftly-running moments in their flight,
Move forward through commencement night to make the plan complete;
And with every passing hour each classmate grows more dear,
Until we fondly wish that it were our beginning year.

A. W.

Junior Class



"Oh, we're the class of '52." This year's juniors, as upper classmen, are working hard and taking important responsibilities to show their qualities of leadership. They know that next year the load, and the fun, will be theirs!

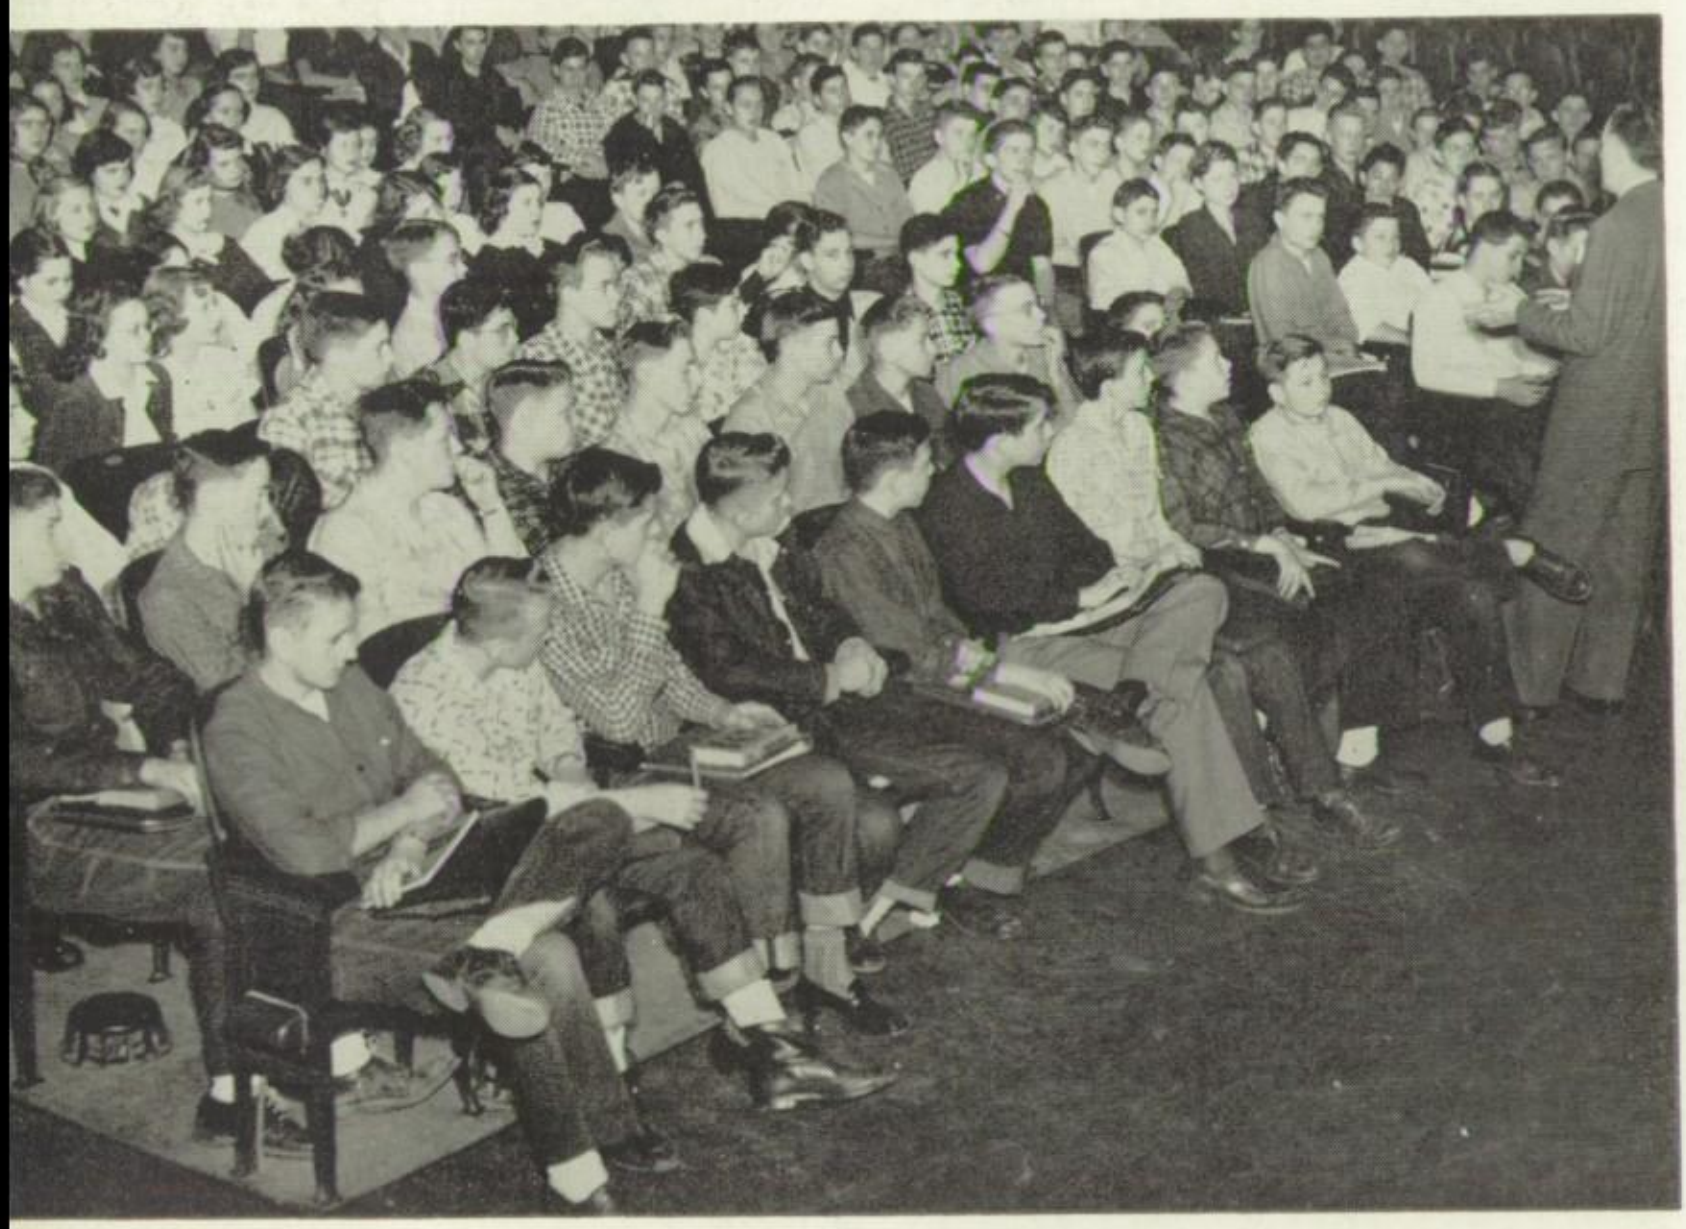
Freshman Class



It's a long road opening out before the freshmen of 1951. But they can start down it right now by joining some of the many clubs and doing their share in the management of the student government. They'll be seniors before they know it.

Eighth Grade

Grade school was never like this! But it's a big adjustment for the students of the eighth grade class, the youngest students at Southwest. This is the sixth year that this class has been with us, and they've become a very permanent part of our school life.

Long Live Summer

Done with clauses, tests, equations!
Done with Spanish and translations!
Done with ancient wars, invasions!
Long live summer and vacations!

Done with proofs and propositions!
Done with test-time inquisitions!
June is here and we're escaping,
Leaving locker doors all gaping.

We now leave these hallowed hallways,
Thinking not of dreadful fall days.
Summer with its long vacation
Beckons us from education.

Off to far, exotic places,
Off we go to see the races.
Off we go to bathing beaches,
Off where books can never reach us.

We are through with every rule.
Through—at least, till summer school.

Organizations

NEW CLUBS AT SOUTHWEST

Four new clubs have been formed this year at Southwest. With the active support of their members, these new organizations were rapidly organized and have firmly established themselves as integral parts of the extra-curricular activities of our school.

DELPHI LITERARY SOCIETY

Delphi Literary Society is one of these four promising new clubs. For its members, the plan and the reality were but a short distance apart. Given loving aid by her sister and brother societies, Delphi forged ahead and was soon on her own. With Miss Flora Linn as the sponsor, the Delphis have received excellent training and they promise to be a definite threat to the other societies in future contests.

SCIENCE CLUBS

The newest club at Southwest is the rapidly advancing Science Club. This year it proved its sense of timeliness by sponsoring the General Electric "House of Magic" assembly. The members carried on science projects including a study of fluorescent and radio-active substances, an analytical study of about 200 soil samples, and a study of the progressive stages of chick embryos.

SPOTLIGHTERS

"The Spotlighters of Southwest High School will again present plays for your enjoyment." Each time this announcement was made the student body and faculty began looking forward to the day with pleasant anticipation. In the spring, the new club attained a high goal in its service to Southwest. Three plays were put on to raise money for much needed stage equipment. From the donations given to this cause, the Spotlighters raised over $400 which was used to buy new scenery for the stage.

PEP CLUB

"And the score goes up another notch!" With such forceful support behind the team as the Indians in orange and black jackets give, the score must inevitably rise. This new and largest club at Southwest, the Pep Club, has made an outstanding success of its support of the football, basketball, and track teams. Supporting football and track dances through the Student Council has been another successful phase of this very active body.

Sports

"If we lose, we'll try to keep our chins up, and if we win, we'll try to keep our noses down." These were the words of Coach Louis A. House at a pre-season pep assembly and certainly they express the real value of athletics at Southwest.

Sometimes the lessons gained on the playing field are even more valuable than those of the classroom: the courage to carry on through adversity, the ability to sacrifice individual glory for the benefit of the team, the personal satisfaction of doing your best.

The long hours, the competition, and the achievement of each member of the athletic teams will always be a source of personal pride and satisfaction, but certainly SPORTS, the most demanding and spectacular of all school activities, merits public recognition.

Football—1950

A spirited bunch of Southwest Indians, again guided by that dean of Interscholastic League coaches, Louis A. House, battled their way to the Co-championship of 1950 over some of the toughest competition in league history. Paseo was the first victim of the tomahawk, 13-0. The East Bears were edged 7-6 by an Ade-to-Bold pass in the closing minutes and Central and Manual bowed in short order. In the Westport contest it was the Indians all the way, featuring a 99-yard kickoff return by McKee. The high spot of the season, however, was the brilliant upset victory over favored Southeast, 19-14, sparked by the block-busting line plunges of "Jarrin' John" Handley, the game-saving end-zone catch by Captain Mark, and the supreme collective effort of the entire team. In their methodical climb from a predicted fifth place to the league Co-championship, the Indians certainly proved that "a team that won't be beat, can't be beat!"

Lettermen

MARK STEIN—For his now famous pass-snaring ability, his less spectacular, but equally skillful defense, and his ready spirit, "Marko" was elected honorary captain for the 1950 season. Incidently, this was his second year as end for the All-Stars.

CARL ADE—Powerful punts, long passes, and kickoffs that sent opponents back under their own goalposts earned him an All-Star "honorable mention."

COOPER ALLEN—A stevedore in cleats, Coop will anchor next year's line with his size and ruggedness.

STANFORD BOLD—Southwest's "secret weapon"—the fastest man in a football uniform, he showed flashes of brilliance in both offense and defense.

ED ENFIELD—Ed, a bulldog on defense, took particular pleasure in ripping up opposing lines. He'll be back next year too.

DUDLEY GILMORE—Conscientious practice and lots of hustle paid off in a good, all-round performance at the end position.

JACK HANSLIP—Opponents had no love for this "Leon Hart" of the Southwest forward wall. Above average playing ability and undiluted roughness won him an All-Star "honorable mention."

JIM HILL—As defensive specialist, Jim seemed to have a "sixth sense" that told him where the play was going; and he was there to get more than his share of the tackles.

DON MARSH—Hard-charging but steady at the center slot, Don could be depended on to pull through in the clutches; undoubtly he was one of the best offensive centers in the league.

1950

JOHN HANDLEY—In spite of an injured foot, John fought his way to the top bracket in passing, running, and scoring. Coupled with signal calling and fine defensive work, these records won him an All-Star position. The award of the Nigro Trophy testifies to his all-round ability and unfailing sportsmanship.

TOM McKEE—The proverbial workhorse of the team, dependable defensively and among the top league ground-gainers, he deserved more than "honorable mention."

HAROLD MICHAEL—Mike made a habit of being "Johnny-on-the-spot" when a key block or a timely tackle was needed. This habit won him an All-Star "honorable mention."

GUS NOTTBERG—A mid-season injury merely "caged" the energies of this rugged tackle. Next year he should really blast open the opposition.

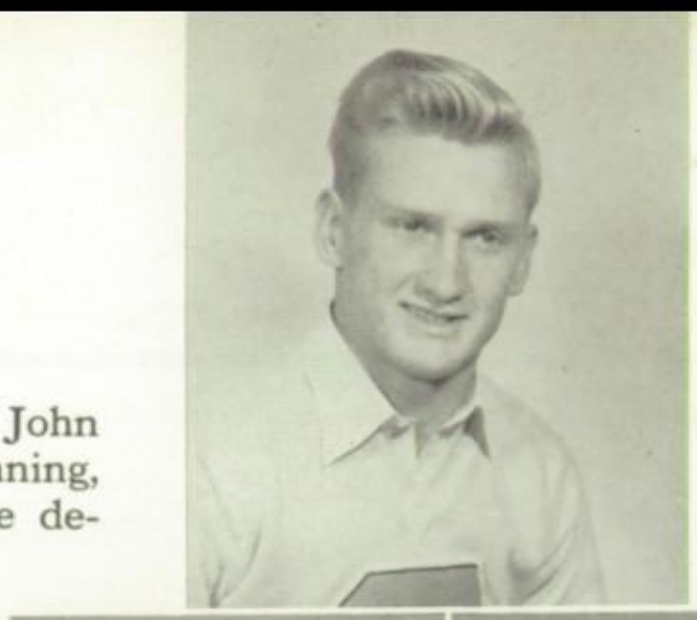
HARDY MONTAGUE—Probably the most versatile man on the team, Hardy played center, tackle, end, and back at one time or another in the season.

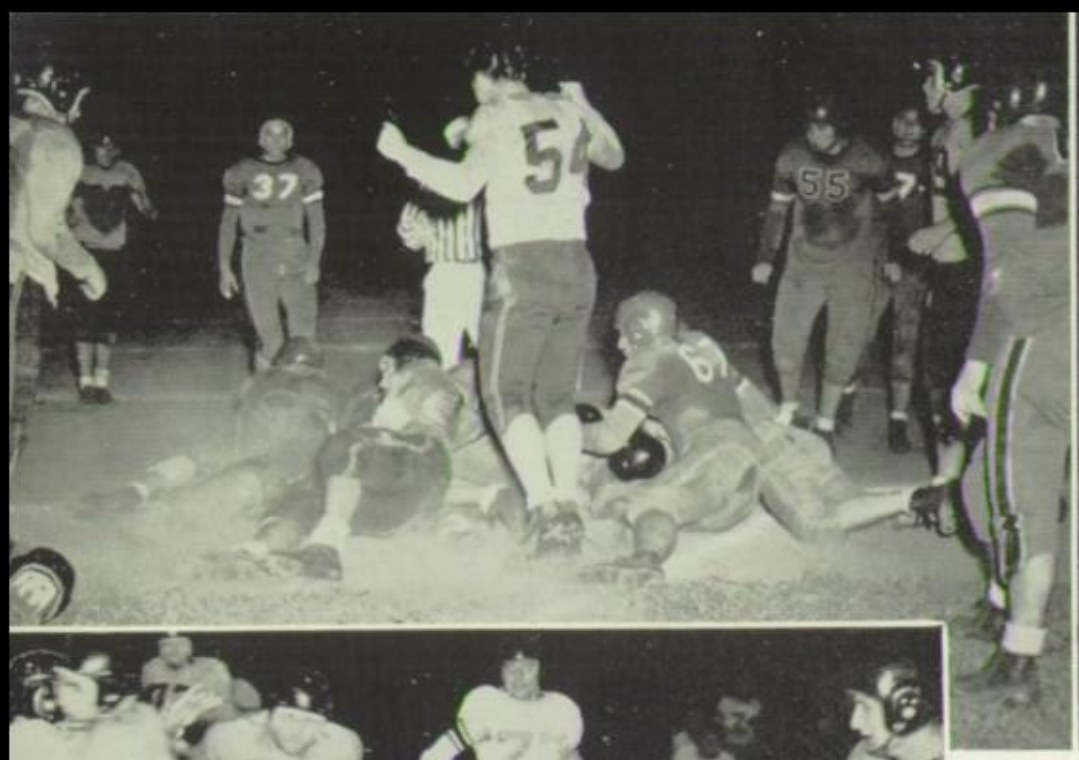
VIC SWENHOLT—As a speedy halfback, Vic reeled off substantial gains throughout the season. Good teamwork was evident in his blocks that opened the way to paydirt more than once.

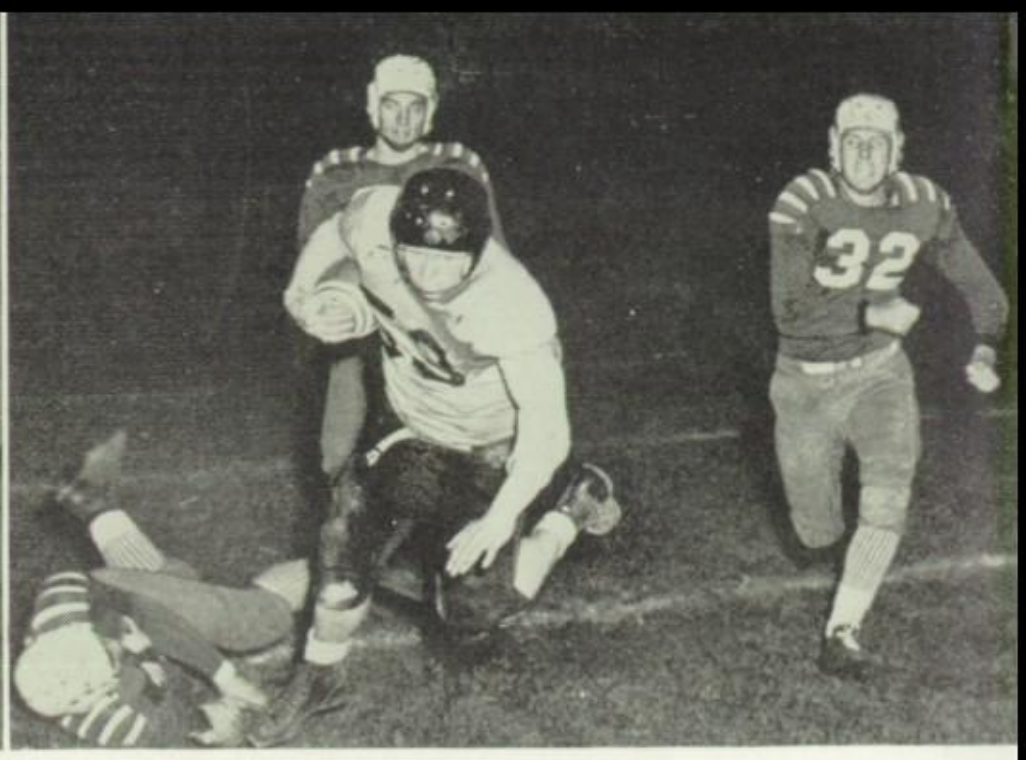
MYRON WANG—The smallest, but perhaps the most aggressive guard in the league, "Round Man" rocked the big boys when the chips were down.

JOHN POWELL—The Paseo game revealed the hidden talents of this fast, hard-charging little back who will return to spark next year's squad.

JOHN RUDOLPH—Smart teams didn't run his tackle. His consistent play, especially good under pressure, merited a berth with the All-Stars for the second successive year.







Braves crush opponents for gridiron Co-Championship in roughest season in Interscholastic league history.

Second Team Football

An unusually large number of underclassmen turned out for second-team football in 1950, necessitating the formation of two "platoons," one team of juniors and one team of sophomores and freshmen. A second division spot in the league's final standings could not conceal the abundance of natural ability on these squads. The valuable training and first-hand experience gained on the second team are the fundamentals on which winning first teams are built.

Basketball—1951

Hampered by that demon of all athletic teams, inconsistancy, the Indian basketballers of 1951, in spite of finishing in the league's second division, forcefully staked their claim to next year's championship. The eleven-man squad, operating with only five seniors, and sparked by "Dunk" Matteson, an outstanding junior, displayed flashes of brilliance and fight that are the basis of a championship team; a close and hard-earned victory over Ruskin; a scrappy although futile effort against Chrisman in the Regionals; and what was undoubtedly the greatest comeback in league history, a heartbreaking 1-point loss to Northeast. With six of the veterans returning next year, Coach Bredehoeft can promise more good basketball in 1952.

Lettermen

DICK JENSEN—Alert and scrappy, but cool under pressure, the "vest pocket" floor general was elected Honorary Captain for 1951.

DUNCAN MATTESON—"Mr. Basketball" of Southwest—his fight and hustle under the hoop and his infallible jump-shot merited "Dunk" a third place among the league Second-Team All-Stars.

CARL ADE—All-round ability and unfailing sportsmanship won Carl an All-Star "honorable mention" for the second straight year.

JOHN HANDLEY—Equally at home on the basketball court as on the football field, John displayed a world of drive and hustle.

JOHN PAUL JONES—A consistent rebounder and a deadly hook-shot artist, his scoring was a vital factor in several Indian triumphs.

JOE McNAY—Joe saw action regularly throughout this season; his hustle and talent will guarantee him a starting berth next year.

HAROLD MICHAEL—A strong team player, Mike was an important cog in the Indian game, both offensive and defensive.

GORDON NEVERS — Gordy was an aggressive rebounder and a regular in the scoring columns throughout the season, conscientious and dependable.

JOHN POWELL — A promising performance at the post assured this sophomore an assignment in the coming season.

MARK STEIN—The "bulldog" tactics of Mark, a two-year letterman, were a major factor in the Indian defense.

Track—1950

The 1950 track season was nullified when a short school term and bad weather forced a cancellation of the All-City Meet. Southwest split the only two dual contests of the year, winning over Central 58-47 and losing to Northeast 45½-59½. However, early fall of 1950 found promising Indian tracksters rounding the cinders in preparation for a return of the crown to Southwest in 1951.

Tennis

The intra-school tournament, won for the second year by Doug Haines, resulted in the selection of these six net men to represent Southwest: Booker, Cayot, Haines, Minda, Poisner, and Slaughter. Dropping a dual contest to Wyandotte, the Indians made a better showing in the city tournament, where Slaughter and Poisner advanced to the second round doubles by defeating Northeast 6-1 and 6-2. By virtue of this performance, they became the tennis lettermen of 1950.

Girls' Sports

Each season adds new and exciting sports to the girls' athletic agenda at Southwest. Fall offers hockey, soccer, and horseback riding, three active and exceptionally strenuous sports which are greatly enjoyed. Winter sports include basketball, volleyball, life-saving, and ice skating. With the advent of spring, softball, swimming, bowling, archery, badminton, and table tennis occupy a large portion of the class periods.

A Year of Progress

The Southwest Battalion of the Reserve Officers Training Corps is proud to have the largest unit it has had in several years. The unit has grown because of the interest of the cadets in ROTC. They realize that this training is vital in facing the world, whether it be at peace or war. Since a unit cannot grow without capable leaders, the credit goes to Master Sergeant Walter L. Halverson and Sergeant First Class Everette Glenn, Jr., for the development of this unit into a crack battalion.

Southwest took top honors, for the second consecutive time, in the annual Military Ball. Our Battalion Queen, Miss Betty Davis, who was escorted by Cadet Major Worcester, was crowned Regimental Queen. She was competing against the Battalion Queens of seven other high schools for this honor.

Regimental Executive Officer
Lt. Col. Robert Worcester

The cadets during their training, which may last four years, learn many useful things. They have classes in physical development, first aid, leadership, and map reading, which are useful in civilian life. Useful Army training in such procedures as disassembly, assembly, functioning, and firing of weapons is given. Classes are also held in small unit tactics, marksmanship, and drill.

There are many events which are of interest to the cadets each year. These events include the Military Ball, Field Day, Government Inspection, ROTC Circus, Battalion picnic and the officers' trip to Ft. Leavenworth.

We wish to thank Miss Jane Joyce, who was selected ROTC Sponsor, for helping to develop the unit.

To the Southwest ROTC Battalion:

The current World-Wide crisis has definitely emphasized the vital importance of the ROTC. The endless knowledge and experience obtained will be of immense value to all of you. Take heed of it!

ROTC, as connected with Southwest, has greatly gained in prestige and enrollment in the last few years. This has been due mainly to the efforts of Master Sergeant Walter L. Halverson. Through the inspiring leadership of Sergeant Halverson and Sergeant First Class G. E. Glenn, ROTC has indeed progressed.

The stature of our unit at Southwest is recognized by the three-fold increase in enrollment in as many years. This momentum must continue. The responsibility of the continued success of the Southwest ROTC Battalions is now up to each of you. Accept it and your unit will rise to even greater heights.

Sincerely yours,

Fritz Thum, Lieutenant-Colonel,

Battalion Commander.

R.O.T.C. Rifle Team

The Southwest Marksmen, though not breaking into the winners' circle in the Interscholastic league, gained valuable experience and provided next year's team with lettermen and skill for the rifle season.

The Indian sharpshooters obtained a better road record by splitting a decision with William Chrisman and ranking high at the Little Camp Perry Match.

Individual honors of the year were taken by Richard Klein, who placed on the city all-star team, and Charles Dobbins, who became the N.R.A. club champion.

The team's highest score was a 905 fired for the National Hurst Trophy.

Redskin Revels goes to New Orleans

Florida was one of the vacation spots visited

Redskin Revels

A WINTER VACATION

Displaying the theme of a "Winter Vacation," the Ninth Redskin Revels was presented on March first and second in the school auditorium. With a cast of over 150 and a production staff of over 50, the Revels visited such vacation havens as the Florida beach, New Orleans, Sun Valley, a Dude Ranch, and Latin environs.

At the beginning of the show several typical students were seen singing, "Take Us Away From It All." Then in successive scenes these girls were among tourists who went first to the station and then to "Welcome Travelers" Radio Show, Florida, Louisiana, Idaho, Arizona, and finally Latin America.

Carol Jean Heuerman in the New Orleans scene.

Mary Weddendorf explains to her students, "Now do be careful and don't go near any cowboys."

Saul Ellis musically dances his way to a winter vacation, while Bob Pearce and John Miller tune up in the opening scene.

Ronnie Knutson provides excitement and laughter with his skeleton dancing to "Dry Bones" in the radio show portion.

Bob Hackler begins his journey to the state of Tennessee with a tap routine.

"Gee, think of us having our picture taken with Marla Kay."

"You know, this is Saturday. Maybe we could win another jackpot."

The real stars of the play—the stagehands, directors, make-up crew and script readers.

"Riddle Me Riches"

"Riddle Me Riches," by Anne Ferring Wheatherly was presented by the seniors as the annual senior play on April 20 and 21.

The play, a comedy, tells the story of a young boy winning a jackpot of $20,000. The first act takes place on Saturday afternoon when Chuck is trying to persuade his father to help him solve the riddle.

In the second act is seen the not so bright side of winning a jackpot.

During the third act, things begin to straighten out. Just as things are working smoothly, and everyone is happy that it is over Dad suddenly thinks, "By the way, do you know this is Saturday, maybe we can win the jackpot again."

Stage Crew

Constantly working behind the scenes are the important members of the stage crew. They are always on hand at all school assemblies and plays displaying the work which they have spent many hours perfecting and rehearsing after school. Even when the pictures for the Sachem are being taken, the stage crew is on hand to operate the lights. Although they do not receive much acclaim, how unfinished would our assemblies and plays be without the hours that the stage crew spends painting scenery, making lighting effects, and setting up the scenery. To the stage crew we owe all the credit for the polish and exactness of our school presentations.

"Resolved: that the American people should reject the Welfare State." This was the National High School Debate question for 1950-1951 which stirred both negative and affirmative Southwest debate teams to hard work for well-planned, logical debates. This broad question required skill of the debaters in research and in careful presentation of their material.

The debate team, coached by Miss Grace Breen, is composed of twelve students chosen from the public speaking class for their ability to organize and execute debates.

This year, Southwest participated in debates with representatives from Westport and Manual. Although these were not decision debates, friendly rivalry existed between the teams, making the above-stated question the basis of two exciting series of debates. Southwest can justly be proud of its debate team, which met competitors with logical arguments and scund refutations.

Short Story—Very Superior

THE NOVICE AT PROSPECT ROCK

By Frances Gilbert

High on a hill above the little mountain village of Dorchester, a secluded trail winds its way up from the deep valley to the heights of Stratton Mountain. Hidden in the dense mountain forests, it takes off from a backwoods road and begins an immediate ascent. It passes a deserted lumber camp, with its tumble-down shacks and caved-in loading dock, covered with straggling underbrush. It crosses and recrosses a melodious little stream as it wends its way higher into the forest. Up and up it climbs until, at the rim of a deep ravine, it reaches a towering cliff—sentinel of this hidden spot. Here, Prospect Rock stands impassive, overlooking the lush valleys spread out below.

Many years ago the now-hidden path was a well-cleared corduroy road which rumbled with the passing of heavy lumber wagons. The camp hummed with activity; the shacks were sturdily built, and new-fangled machinery whined and whirred on the mountainside. The logging road ran far into the hills, skirting great outcroppings of granite, and cutting its way between massive pines. Today, only Prospect Rock remains silent and unchanged by the passing of years.

* * * * *

Rufus had driven down to Dorchester Depot with the black two-seater and the family's one and only carriage horse. He looked ruefully down at his good blue suit.

Road's gettin' mighty dusty, he thought, brushing at his knees.

This was really an occasion for the Greene family; not very often did a friend from the city venture into the Vermont ccuntry-side for a visit. Today, for the first time, the family would meet the daughter of Mrs. Greene's girlhood friend.

At short intervals the little group of men standing by the track consulted their watches and peered down the track to the bend which carried it off on its curving course through the valley.

"Dam train must be settin' down at South Mills," drawled an old townsman placidly at Rufus' elbow. "Been fifteen minutes late ever'day since this dee-pot been built."

Finally a shrill whistle warned of the train's arrival, and brown smoke could be seen above the tall trees. The shining locomotive of the Albany-Montreal express lurched into the village, paused just long enough for the porter to tumble several grimy travelers onto the tiny station platform, and rushed on to the North. The crowd of idle spectators vanished, and Rufus found himself sitting in the carriage beside a lovely young thing in a broad and flower-bedecked white bonnet.

"Durn pretty girl," Rufus confessed to the family later. And she was pretty, with dark hair meticulously curled and deep brown eyes framed in long lashes.

In fact, Rufus was so overcome by this vision of charm that he was almost tongue-tied and, except for a polite "Hope you had a fine trip, Miss Mabel," was content to say nothing.

He was not allowed to be silent for long, however, because Mabel, after carefully settling her skirts, became quite talkative.

"I suppose you're Rufus," she said with a smile. "Aunt Hattie wrote me you'd come to the station for me. I had the loveliest trip. I couldn't see out most of the time because of that horrid smoke, but the country-side is just beautiful. You know, I was thinking what a quiet life it must be away from cities. You must love it. Have you ever been to the city? This is a lovely little town! It's so quaint!"

Rufus winced.

"How far is it home?" she asked.

"I reckon about an hour."

"Look! We're leaving the town already. It isn't very big, is it? But it's sweet. I've heard so much about Vermont villages. I just know I'm going to have a perfectly lovely vacation here!"

"Hope so, Miss Mabel."

"Please call me Mabel. Oh, look! What beautiful hills!"

"Those hills are the Green Mountains, Miss Mabel."

"How silly of me! How high are they?"

"High enough to be mountains, I reckon."

"Oh, but they're lovely! Such lights and shadows! Does one climb them?"

"If he wants t' get to the top."

"Will you take me? Tomorrow?" she begged. "Oh, please. It must be magnificent to look down on everything from the top of a mountain. Look!" She pointed eagerly toward Owl's Head. "Can we climb that one with the round top?"

No masculine heart could resist such a delightful picture of feminine appeal. Rufus would have escorted her to the very top of Pico! Right now, his face was covered with an unmanly blush.

"Waal . . . I reckon we can find a better place to go. Maybe Prospect Rock."

"Tomorrow? Please?"

"I reckon so. We'll take the buckboard—can't climb a big one on your first day."

The next day dawned bright and clear on a gathering of Greene cousins of varying degrees and a bustle of preparation at the Greene farmhouse. Picnic baskets were packed with freshly baked bread and doughnuts. Sweaters, jackets, and hats were put in the old buckboard. The young people crowded in amid laughter and shouts, and after a good-natured scramble for the seats along the side, they were off down the narrow Meadow Lane.

The trail up to Prospect Rock was a corduroy lumber road. Once past the noisy machinery, and log-loading docks, the jolting buckboard and its crowd of boisterous picnickers invaded the quiet forest.

Mabel's radiant personality had made fast friends of all her new acquaintances; she sat in the midst of the jovial group.

They called out to each other, and pointed out the secrets of the forest as they went along—a rare Marsh fern, a delicate pink Lady's Slipper, or the flamboyant Red Rainberry. Those that were sitting at the sides leaned out now and then and snatched ripe raspberries from the thickets along the road.

Time passed rapidly and before long the party reached its destination — Prospect Rock. The buckboard was emptied before the old horse could slow to a stop.

Through a cut in the trees, a footpath led to the cliff and ended at its edge where sheer granite met the sky. The sun was high over the mountains and shed luminous brillance on the opposite ridge. It sparkled on the white steeple rising above the little church of Dorchester. The day was magnificently clear and even the faraway peaks of the Adirondacks were faintly visible in their white-robed splendor.

The whole crowd climbed to the cliff, where they stood thrilled by the view. Mabel was delighted.

"Oh! Isn't this beautiful! I can see clear up the valley!"

She moved up beside Rufus, who was standing at the edge of the rock, his feet apart, braced against the wind.

"What do you call that mountain over there?" she asked, pointing across the valley.

Rufus wheeled. "Keep back from the edge, Miss Mabel. It's mighty far t' fall!"

"Oh, silly! I'm not the least bit afraid, really. See, I'll stand right at the very edge."

Before anyone could move, she walked confidently to the summit of the cliff and gazed out over the valley. The others stood speechless for a moment.

"Mabel," shrilled one of the girls. "Come back!"

Mabel started involuntarily. She glanced back. Suddenly her confidence deserted her and she began to step back uncertainly. Her foot slipped on a loose rock; her friends gasped. Frightened, she clutched for a hold, but a whole sheet of gravel slid from under her feet and shot over the edge.

Before she could cry out, Mabel plunged out of sight. Rufus' arm grabbed futilely at the empty air.

For a horrible moment there was silence. Terror clutched the little group standing frozen to the rock, unable to scream or move. Was Mabel alive? Or was she lying in a crumpled heap at the foot of the cliff?

Suddenly a white-faced girl darted forward, but Rufus flung her back.

"Keep back, all of you," he shouted hoarsely.

Throwing himself flat on the rock, he hung his head over the edge. Silence waited.

"Mabel," he gasped incredulously.

"What is it? Do you see her? Where is she?" came frenzied whispers behind him.

"Look! Right down there! She's caught in a tree!"

The boys, too, looked over the cliff.

"He's right! Whew! Only twenty feet down! Mabel! You all right?"

Mabel turned a white face upward, without loosing her hold on the little tree. It was a tiny, gnarled pine, clutching the bare rock with knotted roots. Around her was nothing but space and the wind. Below her the rock plunged down to the ravine.

"Don't move, Mabel," Rufus cried. "We'll get you!"

The frightened group looked at each other in dismay and turned uncertainly to Rufus.

In a few minutes, Mabel saw a human chain begin to wind its way over the side of the cliff. The boys had hooked hands, with the girls at the back, and were attempting to reach her at the risk of their own lives.

Rufus was let down first. And then —slowly, tortuously—the rest of the boys, linked with tense hands, followed his perilous footholds.

Rufus explored his way carefully, feeling with his toe for the next crevice or rock that would support his weight. His progress was painfully slow; minutes stretched into hours.

Inches at a time, the distance between Rufus and Mabel diminished.

Suddenly, when he was so close that he could almost reach her upstretched hand, he slipped and lost his foothold. For an awful moment he hung suspended by one hand, while with his other he sought desperately for a firm hold.

A rock broke loose and clattered down, caroming crazily off the cliff.

At last his searching foot found a secure ledge. He pressed tight against the cliff to recover his breath. The blood pounded in his head.

The strain on the other boys had been terrific; already Rufus could feel the fingers that were clutching his wrist loosen almost imperceptibly.

Beads of sweat broke out on his face.

"Mabel!" He wrenched out the words. "Miss Mabel, can you reach my hand?"

He grasped her wrist tightly.

Then began the slow climb back to safety; the boys inched their way back toward the top, clinging to the rock like burrs.

Mabel struggled desperately against her rapid loss of strength. Several times her slight body was almost whisked off the side of the cliff by the terrific force of the wind.

She had been dragged to within several yards from the top, when suddenly the last of her strength gave out. She went limp against the rock; her face was a pallid blur against the jagged cliff.

"Fer God's sake, don't faint now!" Rufus choked, frantically tightening his hold on her wrist. She opened her eyes.

"I can't make it, Rufus. Let me go!"

"You gotta," he pleaded in terror. "Only a few feet further! Please, Mabel! Don't look down!"

Her eyes had closed again.

Helplessly, he watched her chalk-white face.

Those on top understood the danger and waited in numb despair.

Then one of the boys stepped to the edge of the cliff; his clenched hands were the only sign of his fright. He spoke calmly, in a conversational tone.

"For heaven's sake, Mabel. Hurry up, will you? They're expecting us home pretty soon."

Mabel looked up.

"I'll try," she whispered through dry lips.

Trembling with relief, Rufus helped her to the rim of the cliff. With a final burst of energy she pulled herself over the edge and sank to the ground, too exhausted and frightened to do more than sob weakly.

From Prospect Rock one can still look out over the narrow, interlocking valleys, still see the pattern of Dorchester's dusty roads, watch the toy train pulling around the bend into the depot, see the glint of sunlight on the white church spire.

And, toward the north end of the Dorchester valley, if one uses binoculars, he can even spot the Greene farmhouse, a fine old establishment. The present owner is Rufus Greene, who has inherited the place from his mother, and who lives there now with his charming wife, Mabel.

THINKER, ARTIST, SAINT

By Clayton Smalley

"They serve God well
Who serve His creatures."

On the banks of a placid lake surrounded by the tropical, blue-green jungles of Africa, stands a group of crude buildings. The natives for miles around have come to rely upon this outpost of civilization whenever they are in need of medical or spiritual aid. They have also learned to love the wrinkled, silver-haired old man who is responsible for this mission-hospital and who has worked among them all his life. Yes, ever since he was thirty-eight, Doctor Albert Schweitzer has ministered to the diseased bodies and the faltering souls of these African natives. Today, thirty-six years later, although his failing eyesight has forced him to leave surgery to his younger assistants, Doctor Schweitzer continues his fight against pain and ignorance in the heart of the Dark Continent.

But this isn't all the story. There are several other things about this kindly old man of which even his beloved patients are probably unaware. Indeed, most of the world is ignorant of the fact that Albert Schweitzer is the foremost concert organist in Europe, and one of the leading editors and interpreters of the music of Johann Sebastian Bach. Few people know that he has long been considered one of the greatest surgeons and physicians in the world, or that his writings on philosophy and religion have caused revolutionary changes in both these fields. In any of these—music, science, philosophy, or religion—the world has long been ready to recognize Albert Schweitzer as a genius, and to award him the wealth and renown which accompany this recognition. A life of riches, glory, and ease has always been well within his reach. And yet he lives in one of the most remote, uncivilized parts of the globe, surrounded by disease and ignorance. What could prompt a man of such diversified genius to choose a life of hardship over one of fame and fortune?

From his earliest childhood, there had been growing in young Albert a sense of duty and responsibility toward those less fortunate than he. As he himself put it, he felt that "whosoever is spared personal pain must feel himself called upon to help in diminishing the pain of others." Thus, at the age of twenty-one he pledged his entire life to that purpose. With the acclaim of the concert hall already ringing in his ears, he abandoned his promising musical career and undertook the task of fulfilling his vow.

Since then he has found that he really lost nothing when he chose this life of service. He has discovered that what he lost in fame and riches he has received tenfold in another form of remuneration—the love and respect of the people he treats. Moreover, he has found a boundless satisfaction in the service he has rendered his fellow men. In short, he has found the happiness that comes from making others happy.

Oh, that more of us today, in a world full of selfishness and greed, could ourselves find this same happiness; could let our lives, like that of Albert Schweitzer, become a veritable outpouring of selfless service to mankind.

Thinker, artist, saint. These, then, are the man who has become a legend in Darkest Africa, Albert Schweitzer. And yet he is more. He is a true humanitarian who has found his life by losing it in the unselfish service of others.

THE WORLD WILL NEVER FORGET

By Miles Sutin Remer

"Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
* * * * * *
I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

Just as these glorious words inspired by deep-rooted humanitarianism are inscribed on the base of the Statue of Liberty, so does the indelible imprint of Franklin Delano Roosevelt hold high a beacon light for all mankind.

The world is grateful for the birth of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Born of influential parents on January 30th, 1882, Franklin Roosevelt, imbued with a rich tradition of liberal understanding of humanity, brought into our government a "mixture of noblesse oblige, good sportsmanship, and solemn dedication."

After graduating from law school, he was influenced into a life of politics. As governor of New York, he held the power of restraint over the political "bosses" of Tammany Hall with a demonstration of efficient and honest state government.

But, at the age of 40, this great statesman was stricken with polio. Miraculously recovering, it developed within himself a spiritual devotion, a courage, and a faith which raised him to the pinnacle as a powerful leader, brilliant of mind although handicapped by infantile paralysis.

Step-by-step, with his clear-thinking and the power of his golden voice, Franklin Roosevelt emerged as the thirty-second President of the United States.

His first task as the nation seemingly stood on the brink of an abyss was to restore its morale, and because of his humanitarianism and his belief in the ideals of American democracy, Franklin Roosevelt established the New Deal, rebuilding the faith, the hope, and the courage of the American people.

The world will never forget his fireside chats over the radio. "He saw families in their parlors listening with their neighbors; he was conscious of their faces and hands, their clothes and homes. His voice was that of an intimate friend," and sitting by their radios and listening to his sincere discussions, each family felt that he was directing his messages to them personally, and that a true friend was addressing them; their friend, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, having known the deep roots of trouble, could understand, with humility, the problems of his people.

It was on April 12th, 1945, that our nation was stunned by the sudden death of one of the greatest and most-beloved leaders of our times. We must strive to preserve his memory, his spiritual and cultural achievements, and to follow the pathway that he has opened and has strengthened for our existence, and as once more we face a turbulent world, we pray that "God give us men! A time like this demands

Strong minds, great hearts, true
faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office
cannot buy!"

please, stay as sweet as you are and don't let anything go to your head because you're just right the way you are. — even in width. (no offense)

Have loads of fun next year, and don't forget me — I'll be looking to see you. Best of luck always "Monty" "Phido"

Dear Jim,

Ist — It really has been terrific getting to know you better this year. I only wish in someway that the year wasn't ending — it's going to be awful not being here next year when all of you will be having such a terrific senior year. You've made a great success in all your activities in the past three years and I know you'll have a bang-up time next year.

We had lots of fun this year particularly at that St. Andrews play. I had more fun in those two nights that five nights put together. I know you'll make a terrific president.

Although at sometimes we didn't agree on things and had a few arguments I hope you forget those things and remember only the good side of me.

I'm afraid I won't be seeing you so much before I leave unless you come over and see me when I get home from camp and after I now — I really hope you do — I'd also love to have you write me out at camp as it gets awful lonesome.

That's it no dull — you're really terrific and awful sweet. Please

ON HOMEWORK

T. V. is now my main homework,
It seems the rest I often shirk.
But when the programs are not so hot
I settle down to do a spot.

My teachers think I'm very poor
When in my subjects I do not soar.
I wish they'd see that I'm a whiz
Cause television gives no quiz.

Well Jim - Its been a wonderful 3 years knowing you. I'll never meet a better guy than Slim Jim. all you have to do is keep that happy smile on your face and you'll have no trouble whatsoever.

Good luck always

ON FINAL EXAMINATIONS

We're not afraid! You see—we laugh!
There's nothing we cant' do!
Think of the tests that we have passed—
(And flunked?—Well, quite a few.)

We're not afraid! We're young and strong!
Much harder things we've dared—
We're not afraid—of course we're not!
We're busy being scared!

Dear Jim

No kidding you are one of the sweetest boys I've ever known. You've been so swell to me this year. I was always teasing some lunch money off you or pestering you with my troubles and I had so much fun with ya ☺ Remember that time we double-dated? Not too funny ☺☺ I hope we'll always be real good friends like we have been this year and always know each other ☺ I'll write you next year ☺!

You have a tremendous personality and a great sense of humor. It didn't seem lucky to have you, I'll sure remember you as a marvelous boy. Love,

Phillo Shirley

DEGENERATION

There was an eighth grader most prudent,
Avowed he would be an "E" student.
He swore grades came first,
For best or for worst,
And if tempted to cheat, said he wouldn't.

* * * * *

As a senior he is a "big wheel"
And neglects his teachers' appeal,
Till they say, "Son, no knowledge
Will result in no college!"
So exam week he works with great zeal.

Jim,
much Glike you know how isn't much use trying to put it into words. Best wishes and loads of Luck always. Youre a swell frat brother.

Well Jim,
Another year ends and it's been great being in Study
Hall with you. Lots of luck.
